In January 1998 Jennifer Worth read an essay that described the striking absence of the midwife in Western literature. This invited her to write her midwifery memoirs. She wrote three volumes of midwifery memoirs, Call the Midwife (2002), Shadows of the Workhouse (2005), and Farewell to the East End (2009), followed by a further volume of memoirs as a nurse taking care of the very ill, In the Midst of Life (2010). Her midwifery series was instantly successful, and recognized as a major historical document as well as an interesting read.

Worth was excited at the expectation of her midwifery books being used for a BBC drama, the series Call the Midwife, but she had cancer and died at her home on 31 May 2011. Call the Midwife was shown on TV in January 2012, and was immediately successful; the final episode of the first series attracted 9.2 million viewers, making it the most successful new drama series on BBC television since 2001. Further series were aired in 2013 and 2014.
